Held in the Black Hills in South Dakota, USA, this 5k race is a great way to enjoy the awe-inspiring scenery of the Black Hills. The Black Hills Marathon is a relatively new event (it was first held in 2007) and it is held in two phases: the 5K and the half marathon. There are often more than 8,000 participants who run the 5K and the half marathon at the same time to create a world record. The early participants were entertained by traditional South Dakota music and dance, as well as greeted by over 200 runners on the course's 10 stumps. The Black Hills Marathon is run in the fall because of the excellent hunting opportunities in the area, a fact that is also celebrated by the race organizers. If you're a runner, you can choose from a variety of different distances. There is even a 10k course for those who want to challenge themselves with longer distances. The course of the event is very scenic and full of awe-inspiring natural beauty. After a flat and easy start, the race leaves the starting line and enters the Black Hills. The highest point reached by runners is 6,173 ft., with a net elevation gain of 9,174 ft. During the race, runners are mainly surrounded by the towering black rocks of the Black Hills. There are plenty of stops where runners can get to know their fellow runners and enjoy some water and food. The Black Hills Marathon is quite popular because of its fun atmosphere and the natural beauty of the area. The event is well-organized. The race organizers make sure that all the runners have water, food and first aid kits on course.
